

ABSTRACT

The present invention relates to a piston for decreasing a frictional losses by receiving a part of the expanding gas during the power stroke of an engine and reducing contact pressure on a piston applied from the expanding gas, thereby enhancing fuel consumption and engine power. The piston for decreasing such friction includes a recess for receiving expanding gas formed in a circumferential section of a top land part of the piston head.